Ethics Statement for University of Illinois Press Journals

For all parties involved in the act of publishing (authors, journal editors, peer reviewers, and publishers) it is necessary to agree upon standards of expected ethical behavior. The ethics statements for our journals are based on the Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE) Best Practice Guidelines for Journal Editors. The Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE) provides resources for journal editors, peer reviewers, and authors on the topic of professional publishing standards at publicationethics.org.

UIP Guiding Principles

The University of Illinois Press (UIP) is committed to the highest standards of scholarly review and professional publishing judgment. By insisting on thorough peer review procedures in combination with careful editorial judgment, the Press performs an intellectual gatekeeping function, ensuring that only scholarship of the highest quality receives the imprint of the University of Illinois.

UIP is committed to supporting the work of the journals' authors, editors, editorial boards, and related organizations by protecting the integrity of the intellectual property published by the Press. To ensure the longevity of the scholarly record, the Press uses a third-party archivist, Portico, to maintain online access to journal content.

Accessibility

Current University of Illinois Press journal content appears on the Scholarly Publishing Collective, a Duke University Press initiative. View their voluntary product accessibility template \(VPAT\) document here.

Duties of Editors

All journals published by UIP are under the editorial direction of their independent editor or editors. It is the editors who make the publication decisions and guide the editorial process, ensuring the integrity, accuracy, completeness, and originality of every published article; they alone are accountable for the content published in their journals. UIP supports its journal editors in their efforts to manage their journals ethically and transparently, while adhering to the established editorial principles and practices in their field. For resolution of ethical concerns, the editor follows the Errors, Corrections, and Misconduct policy described below.

UIP journals are committed to maintaining the privacy and confidentiality of all submitted papers and their authors. Editors will not disclose any information about submissions to anyone other than individuals directly involved in the review process (e.g., editorial staff, editorial advisors, reviewers). In instances where some details must be disclosed, only necessary information will be shared, following the individual peer review policies of the journal. The corresponding author is the only individual who will receive information about the status and content of their submission.

- The Pluralist
- The Polish Review

Editors and editorial board members should declare any conflicts upon assuming their role and should notify the University of Illinois Press of any changes. If an editor is unable to perform their editorial duties in an unbiased manner due to a conflict of interest, editors must recuse themselves from reviewing a manuscript, making editorial decisions, or assigning peer reviewers. Another editor or member of the editorial board should be assigned if needed. See the Conflict of Interest section below for more information.

Author Responsibilities

Submitted work must be the author's own original work that has not been previously published. Proper citation and referencing of sources is required. Authors should ensure that all sources are appropriately credited and cited within their manuscripts. More specific information about the citation preferences of individual journals can be found on their webpages. Authors must guarantee that their submitted work is entirely their own, contains no material that can be construed as libelous, and does not infringe in any way on the copyright of another party. UIP journals condemn all forms of unethical behavior, including data fabrication, falsification, inappropriate image editing, improper authorship attributions (including instances when AI has been used, per our Generative AI policies below), and in any way knowingly or intentionally providing inaccurate information. Any such behavior will result in immediate rejection or retraction. Plagiarism in any form is strictly forbidden.

To qualify for authorship, authors must have made significant contributions to the prepared submission. It is expected that all authors have participated sufficiently in the work to take public responsibility for the content and findings of the article. Each author should be directly involved in the planning of the work, writing a draft or revising it for intellectual content, and approving the final version to be published. Authorship credit should be based on a substantial intellectual contribution and not merely on general supervision of the research or financial support.

Multiple submissions and redundant publications are not allowed. There are no authors fees to submit or publish in any UIP journals.

Authors are encouraged to share their own data and research materials to the extent that it is feasible and appropriate. Transparent and open practices in data sharing can enhance the credibility and impact of research. Authors retain the right to deposit their data in public repositories or archives.

All listed authors must disclose any potential conflicts of interest that could be perceived as influencing the research or article. This includes any conflicts of interest from financial relationships, personal relationships, academic competition, or other factors that could compromise the objectivity, impartiality, or integrity of the article. Failure to disclose a conflict of interest may result in rejection of the article or other appropriate actions. See the Conflict of Interest section below for more information.

Generative AI Policy

The University of Illinois Press requires that all authors submitting to journals are responsible for the text submitted. If AI generated text is used or cited in the text, this must be acknowledged.

See our full Generative AI Policy for more details.

Reviewer Responsibilities

Reviewers are expected to provide unbiased, constructive, and respectful feedback. Reviews should provide specific, actionable suggestions for improvement. They should conduct their review in a professional and courteous manner, without any personal or derogatory comments.

Reviewers are encouraged to suggest that the author review additional published work not currently mentioned in the manuscript that would enhance its quality and comprehensiveness. They should inform the editors of any non-cited material that has similarities of data, observations, or arguments to the article under review. Any feedback of this nature should include the relevant citation.

Privileged information or ideas obtained through peer review must be kept confidential and not used for personal advantage. Reviewers should not consider evaluating manuscripts in which they have conflicts of interest resulting from competitive, collaborative, or other relationships or connections with any of the authors, companies, or institutions connected to the submission. Editors will select alternate reviewers when conflicts of interest interfere with providing an unbiased review. See the Conflict of Interest section below for more information.

Conflict of Interest

The University of Illinois Press is committed to transparency, academic integrity, and unbiased scholarship. All journal contributors (authors, book/media reviewers, guest editors, etc.) and editorial staff must disclose any possible conflicts of interest to the journal's editor. If the editor has any conflicts of interest, the editor should inform the University of Illinois Press as part of their on-boarding to the editorial role.

Conflicts of interest can include, but are not limited to, financial or personal relationships, academic competition or rivalry, sponsorships or funding—related to an individual, institution, or organization.

- Authors must present all research in an unbiased and accurate manner and be transparent about any possible competing interests upon submitting material. This may be included in the Acknowledgement or Conflict of Interest section of the manuscript.
- Reviewers should not consider evaluating manuscripts in which they have conflicts of interest resulting from competitive, collaborative, or other relationships or connections with any of the authors, companies, or institutions connected to the submission. Decisions regarding peer reviewers' possible conflicts of interest will be made following COPE's ethical guidelines, and editors will select alternate reviewers when conflicts of interest interfere with providing an unbiased review. All UIP journals have individual peer review policies displayed on their webpages (located on the "Submissions" tab) with further information about their processes.
- Editors and editorial board members should declare any conflicts upon assuming their role and should notify the University of Illinois Press of any changes. If an editor is unable to perform their editorial duties in an unbiased manner due to a conflict of interest, editors must recuse themselves from reviewing a manuscript, making editorial decisions, or assigning peer reviewers. Another editor or member of the editorial board should be assigned if needed.

Failure to report conflicts of interest could result in rejection or retraction of an article/review, an addendum added to the article, removal of reviewers or editors from the journal or other consequences as determined by the editor or editorial board.

Intellectual Property

Articles published in subscription-based journals are covered under the Press's copyright. Authors grant and assign all rights to The Board of Trustees of the University of Illinois, including all subsidiary rights, as detailed in the authorship content form. However, authors still have the right to republish their work in a book after the journal has been published, as long as the original publication has been properly credited. For open access journals, authors retain full copyright and publishing rights.

View our PDF Policy for more information.

Advertising

Ad content is subject to the approval of the Journals Marketing & Communications Manager. Ad placements are separate from the published content and are not connected to editorial decision-making. See Advertise in Our Journals for more information.

Errors, Corrections, and Misconduct

Every journal's peer review practices are designed to detect errors or other issues in author manuscripts. Peer review policies are individual to each journal and editorial board. Find out more on our journals' webpages.

In instances where an editor finds that a significant error has been published for which a correction needs to be made and in all cases where there is reason for concern about such matters as plagiarism, fabrication of research, or duplicate publication, the editor will review and resolve the matter in consultation with UIP. If a reader has a complaint or identifies an error, they are encouraged to contact the editor of the journal. The editor will take all appropriate measures to clarify the situation and review the article in question for potential amendments. These may include the prompt publication of an erratum or, in the most severe cases, the complete retraction of the affected work.

If the author disagrees with the editor's decision, the author may appeal the decision to the editor for further review. The appeal should include a detailed explanation of the author's position and any relevant evidence or documentation. The editor will evaluate the appeal and make a final determination regarding the appropriate course of action.

In all instances, the Press is committed to preserving the integrity of the scholarly version of record.

Post-Publication Change Policies

Retractions

The University of Illinois Press follows the COPE retraction guidelines. Please refer to these guidelines and discuss the matter with the current journal editor. If material must be retracted, a retraction notice will be issued, and the DOI of the original publication will be directed to this notice.

Corrections

University of Illinois Press Journals are committed to accuracy in the scholarly record. We depend upon the editorial process to ensure accuracy of articles but understand corrections may need to be made to text or metadata after publication. Corrections will be considered for:

1. Online information not matching print publication (errors in title, author, HTML display, etc.)
2. Misspelled author name, affiliation, ORCID information
3. Missing text
4. Errors in existing citations
5. Errors in supplementary materials
6. Errors in data (not requiring retraction)
7. Missing source credits or permission statements
8. Missing references
9. Affiliation changes

Depending on the error, fixes will either be noted with an added footnote or a correction notice. In general, minor changes will be fixed with a footnote notification, and major changes that affect the meaning or interpretation of data will require a correction notice.

Requests for corrections should be made to the journal editor. If the editor believes the situation warrants, they will work with the production editor to make the changes.

Name/Pronoun Changes

Name and/or pronoun changes in articles will be made upon request. Please contact the current journal editor with the details of your publication and the needed changes. Unless otherwise requested, changes to the online files and metadata will be invisible, with no change notice appearing.
